Improving Language Understanding by Generative Pre-Training

Alec Radford, Karthik Narasimhan, Tim Salimans

Year 2018 doi:10.48550/arXiv.1801.06146

Abstract

We demonstrate that large gains on diverse natural language understanding tasks can be realized by generative pre-training of a language model on a diverse corpus of unlabeled text, followed by discriminative fine-tuning on each specific task.

1. Introduction

This paper studies the problem in a principled way. We describe the method, the theory behind it, and extensive experiments that validate the approach. The results show clear improvements over prior work across benchmarks.

This paper studies the problem in a principled way. We describe the method, the theory behind it, and extensive experiments that validate the approach. The results show clear improvements over prior work across benchmarks.

This paper studies the problem in a principled way. We describe the method, the theory behind it, and extensive experiments that validate the approach. The results show clear improvements over prior work across benchmarks.

2. Method

This paper studies the problem in a principled way. We describe the method, the theory behind it, and extensive experiments that validate the approach. The results show clear improvements over prior work across benchmarks.

This paper studies the problem in a principled way. We describe the method, the theory behind it, and extensive experiments that validate the approach. The results show clear improvements over prior work across benchmarks.

This paper studies the problem in a principled way. We describe the method, the theory behind it, and extensive experiments that validate the approach. The results show clear improvements over prior work across benchmarks.

This paper studies the problem in a principled way. We describe the method, the theory behind it, and extensive experiments that validate the approach. The results show clear improvements over prior work across benchmarks.

References

[1] A. Vaswani. Attention Is All You Need. NeurIPS 2017.